

PREPARING FOR A 40 PLUS CITY COMMERCIAL THEATER RUN

New York, NY, April 8th, 2013 – The autism movement took another bite out of the Big Apple this past Friday night as the long anticipated film “The United States of Autism” played to a sold out commercial theater in New York City during the first days of Autism Awareness Month. With an enormous grass roots campaign the independent film is now set to begin a 40+ city run in major theaters around the country, and talks are underway on how to bring the film overseas.

The film follows Richard Everts’ 11,000 mile, 40 day journey across America to visit twenty families and individuals living with autism. Interviewees come from a broad cultural spectrum from Mormon to Muslim and Hispanic to Chinese. Each person shows how autism has shaped their world and, in many cases, made them stronger. What Everts learns along the way changes not only his life, but the lives of those he meets, forever.

The United States of Autism donates 25% of net proceeds from each screening to a local family/individual/organization in the communities. For more information on hosting or to request a screening, go to <http://www.usofautism.com/the-screenings>
